Advising Diverse Populations: How To Be Inclusive Using Appreciative Advising Thursday, May 16 ~ 1:00-2:30pm (Eastern)

Once the live date has passed, this training will be available on demand.

Overview

Academic advising is a key component of any effective retention-to-graduation strategy; it forms the foundation for a successful college experience. As the student populations on most campuses continue to become more and more diverse, this can present challenges for advisors who are concerned about meeting the needs of their advisees. Indeed, working with students who differ immensely with respect to their backgrounds, experiences, preferences, and orientations precludes the use of a 'one-size-fits-all' approach. Customization and flexibility are the keys to the delivery of advising services that meet the sophisticated needs of today's students. Being able to connect with students on an emotional as well as intellectual level sets the stage for a successful advising experience. But this can be difficult for many advisors who lack the knowledge and skills needed to fully understand and appreciate the students they serve.

Please join us for an evidence-based, interactive, hands-on webinar that will provide participants with the competencies they need to effectively engage in academic advising with all students, irrespective of their personal and cultural characteristics. Different student populations have different needs and preferences when it comes to their expectations regarding the advising process; it is important that advisors be able to recognize where their students are coming from and respond in a way that facilitates growth and development along a number of relevant dimensions. This webinar will help advisors enhance their ability to better serve all students and get more of them to the finish line.

Objectives:

- Review the essential components of the academic advising process
- Explore the benefits and challenges unique to academic advising in the 21st Century
- Discover evidence-based best practices in academic advising, including the importance of relationships
- Demonstrate what strategies and techniques work best with specific populations (including first-generation students, first-year students, transfer students, international students, LBGTQIA students, multicultural and racially/ethnically diverse students, student-athletes, non-traditional students, and students with disabilities).
- Examine the application of the appreciative advising model to diverse student populations
- Learn how to connect emotionally with students during the advising process
- Critique real-life examples of effective and ineffective ways of interacting with students during the advising process
- Investigate strategies for engaging all students in a meaningful, productive advising relationships
- Discern issues of confidentiality and security, connectivity, and clarity associated academic advising

Advising Diverse Populations: How To Be Inclusive Using Appreciative Advising

Thursday, May 16 ~ 1:00-2:30pm (Eastern)

Speaker(s)

Dr. Aaron W. Hughey / Professor in the Department of Counseling & Student Affairs
Western Kentucky University

"Academic advising is evolving. Once upon a time, all you had to do was follow a checklist when meeting with students to map out their studies. Fortunately, those days are gone forever. Today's increasingly diverse college students demand a more customized, relationship-centered approach. This webinar will introduce participants to next generation thinking when it comes to the advising process and equip them to be much more effective when working with today's diverse student populations."

Dr. Aaron W. Hughey is a Professor in the Department of Counseling and Student Affairs at Western Kentucky University, where he oversees the graduate degree program in Student Affairs in Higher Education. Before joining the faculty in 1991, he spent 10 years in progressive administrative positions, including five years as the Associate Director of University Housing at WKU. He was also head of the department of Counseling and Student Affairs for five years before returning to the faculty full-time in 2008. Dr. Hughey has degrees from the University of Tennessee at Martin, the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, Western Kentucky University, and Northern Illinois University. He has authored (or co-authored) over 60 refereed publications on a wide range of issues including leadership and student development, counseling, standardized testing, diversity, legal issues, and educational administration. He regularly presents at national and international conferences and consults extensively with companies and schools. He also provides training and professional development programs on a variety of topics centered on student success; working with students who have a variety of challenges, including issues with social media, is one of his specialties. This is a topic he has researched and regularly covers in his graduate classes.
